

AI Visibility Report

rlclandscape.com · 25 September 2026 · prepared by MixedMakerShop

When someone asks an AI assistant instead of typing into Google — the way you found this very conversation, through Gemini — does RLC Landscape come up? This report asks a web-grounded AI three real buyer questions and records whether you're named, who is named instead, and which sites the AI is actually reading from.

COMPETITOR SITES THE AI CITED INSTEAD

The good news first. Your Google Business Profile is not the question mark it seemed like on the phone — it's live, it's claimed, and it already has three real 5.0-star reviews with your own replies on record from about a year ago. That part isn't broken. The gap below is a visibility problem, not a trust problem — which is the easier one to fix.

What the AI actually said

“Who is the best lawn care and mowing service in Hot Springs Village?”

“... several top-rated local companies serve Hot Springs Village and the greater Hot Springs, Arkansas area: 1. Turner's Lawn Care & Landscaping — a locally owned, uniformed team based in Garland County that specifically prioritizes residential properties in Hot Springs Village... 2. Advance Lawn Care (ALC)...”

Sources the AI quoted: turnerslawncareservice.com (a dedicated "near me — Hot Springs Village" landing page) · alclawnmowing.com · wellspringlandscapingandpavers.com · dudesmowing.com · lawndoctor.com

Turner's isn't winning because they're better — they're winning because they built a page that answers this exact question by name. That's a page RLC doesn't have yet.

“Who are the best landscaping and landscape design companies in Hot Springs Village?”

“... 1. Village Precision Pros — highly rated by local residents and voted among the top landscaping providers in the Hot Springs Village Voice Readers' Choice Awards... 2. Brett Ray's Village Landscaping — full-service landscape design, hardscaping, turf management...”

Notice the pattern again — every business named here has a specific, detailed services page the AI can quote from, plus a public mention (an award, a directory profile) it can point to as proof.

“Who installs and repairs sprinkler and irrigation systems in Hot Springs Village?”

“... 1. Irrigation Pro & Landscaping — complete design, full-system installation, routine maintenance, and repair... 2. Coster Landscaping Sprinkler And Construction — specializes in comprehensive sprinkler system inspections, diagnostic repairs, zone valve...”

You told me irrigation is one of your four core services — the AI just doesn't have anything on rllandscape.com specific enough about it to cite.

Why this is a winnable gap, not a rebuild-from-zero

The businesses beating you here mostly have one thing your current site doesn't: a page per service, written specifically enough that an AI can lift real sentences out of it. Right now rllandscape.com has four one-line service tags (Irrigation, Landscaping, Maintenance, Design) and no page that actually answers "who does sprinkler repair in Hot Springs Village" in enough detail to quote. That's a content gap, not a reputation gap — you already have the real 1997 history and the real 5.0-star reviews that Turner's and Village Precision Pros are leaning on public awards and directory profiles to substitute for.

What we'd watch next

- Re-run this scan after the new site ships — a real page per service (lawn care, landscaping, irrigation, design) each written specifically enough to be quotable is the single biggest lever here.
- Get your three real Google reviews — and the ones you're building on Yelp — linked and visible on the new site itself, not just on Google. AI engines cite what they can read on your own domain first.
- Irrigation is your most winnable lane — fewer real competitors than lawn care or landscaping, and it's already one of your four services. A dedicated irrigation page would be the fastest lane to move.

Method: three buyer questions put to a web-grounded AI assistant with live search, on 25 September 2026. Answers and citations recorded exactly as returned. This is a baseline — the value is in the before/after once the new site is live.
